A calling divine, a journey sublime...

One day you asked me not to cook for you, saying, “You can see that I can’t eat anything. Still, why are you cooking? You have so many things to do. Why are you wasting your time cooking for me?”

I told you, “I cook, hoping that someday you will feel better and would like to eat something.”

You replied, “I will get better only when I leave this world.”

I broke down crying. In a very soothing voice you said, “Is this what you learnt from me? Is this what I taught you? Didn’t I say, didn’t I teach you that the spirit soul is immortal and never-changing. It is only the body that changes and finally dies when the soul leaves the body.”

When you left this planet, those instructions remained as my guiding beacon. Although my heart ached with constant agony due to your separation, I tried to remember that you were always there. At that time I used to imagine that just as a mother sometimes hides while teaching her son to walk, urging him to start walking by searching for her, similarly you are hiding behind some invisible curtain so that I will search for you and thus develop my ardent desire to go where you are.

Those days I used to think I had so many things to do here. Therefore, I needed to stay. Now that I have done whatever you wanted me to do, please allow me to go back to you. You have already called back so many of your dear children. Now please allow me to have this good fortune.

Aspiring to be your eternal servant,
Bhakti Charu Swami

A SONG IN STONE

The Samadhi of Srila Bhakti Charu Swami is located opposite Srila Prabhupada's Samadhi in Sridham Mayapura. The Samadhi design draws from the traditional architectural style of Vraja and is crafted in Srila Bhakti Charu Swami Maharaja's favourite white makarana marble.

Inspired by Govardhana parikrama that takes place on this glorious day, the structure contains features of Govardhana Hill such as Airavata Kund, Surabhi Kund, and its flora and fauna. These adorn three sides of the Samadhi. Semi-open marble screens, depicting the trees in Govardhana, allow natural light to illuminate the inner sanctum. The light is ever-evolving, depending on the time of day and brings the aesthetics to life.

The rear panel comprises images of peacocks that hint at the mood of transcendental exchanges between Srimati Radharani and Sri Krsna, in some of Maharaja's most cherished places of pilgrimage in Varsana.

Each of the elements are thoughtfully conceived of as musical notes, architecturally and spiritually woven together into this Song in Stone in Mayapur. This beautiful Samadhi will serve as a fitting tribute to the extraordinary legacy of Srila Bhakti Charu Swami.

“The platform of our union is not here, the platform of our union is in the spiritual sky. If we are really sincere about our spiritual life, if we are sincere about our love for the spiritual master, let's just try to find him where he is; and that search to find him will end us up, take us to the spiritual word.”
